Washable Refills for Wet Jets

I debated long and hard on the best way to do these covers, and finally decided on the most absorbent, thirsty material known to man: Indian pre-fold twill (the fabric used to make diaper-service quality cloth diapers for infants). An interesting fact about Indian twill is that it becomes MORE ABSORBENT every time it is washed! Unlike terry cloth, the longer you use these cloths, the MORE EFFECTIVE they become! The average lifespan for one of these is 8 dozen washings.

Each cloth has been pre-washed 3+ times to give them a good initial absorbency, and can absorb 1 full cup of water without dripping! (This will improve with each washing.) The center of each cloth attaches firmly to the Wet Jet with strips of Velcro, and is 8 layers thick. The wings of each cloth have been doubled over sewn down - giving you the 8-layer absorbency without excessively long and floppy flaps. These doubled-over flaps extend 2" in front and behind. The sides of the cloth extend 1" beyond the Wet Jet to give you excellent side coverage as well. These cloths can be washed right along with your towels or rags and dried on any heat setting - it's best to avoid bleach and fabric softener, though, which dramatically diminish the cloth's absorbency and life.
